

Chapter 9

Sigrid was a little confused when she heard this. "What did my sister post on Facebook?"

"You don't know?" George's father, who had been silent for a long time, said, "Have a look at it later."

After Mrs. Toland finished her lecture, Sigrid quickly took out her mobile phone and clicked into Rebecca's Facebook.

When she saw the content of the first blog on Facebook, she was completely stunned.

Maybe because there were a lot of reporters at the wedding last night, the news had already been in the headlines after the photo revealed that the bride was not Rebecca.

Rebecca's Facebook seemed to have received private messages from many fans who were puzzled, and she posted a blog to reply to those fans.

She thanked her fans for their concerns about her and then explained that she and George had a good relationship, but that some time ago they had broken up, so it was her sister that had married into the Toland family.

Although it was not stated clearly, what she meant was that Rebecca, who loved George, had to step aside because Sigrid had stolen him away. She described George as a sc*mbag who had cheated on her before the wedding.

Sigrid could not imagine whether the Vincent family was still in good condition. Would there be a bankruptcy?

'Has my brother-in-law seen this, and will he be so angry that he will destroy the whole Vincent family?' Sigrid thought to herself.

She gave George a cautious look. "Well... brother-in-law, have you seen Facebook?"

"Mmm." The man's voice sounded cold and unexpectedly calm, which made Sigrid a little confused.

"Aren't you angry? Rebecca's fans... are calling you a sc*mbag..." And they were calling her a vixen, a mistress, and said that she was shameless.

Although she was very unhappy to see those crazy fans who didn't understand the situation and had scolded her because of Rebecca's Facebook post, Sigrid knew that she needed to pay more attention to

George's response to it.

Whether he was unhappy or not was the most important thing.

"Angry." The man looked at her coldly. "What do you think we should do?"

Sigrid was scared. She swallowed and said, "It's all my sister's fault. Don't let the Vincent family go bankrupt. The Vincent family business is my mother's legacy. It has nothing to do with my sister."

She and Rebecca were half-sisters. Her father, Franklin Vincent, had been married three times. His first marriage was to Rebecca's mother, Kama Beaufort. Later, looking to move up the social ladder, he divorced Kama Beaufort and married Sigrid's mother. Sigrid was born of that marriage. A few years ago, her mother passed away and Franklin went back to Kama.

In fact, the Vincent family's company had been left to her mother by her grandfather after his death. It was the inheritance of her mother. If her family went bankrupt because of Rebecca's mistake, the first thing she would do would be to stab the idiot Rebecca!

"Are you defending Edward Finn?" George frowned.

Only then did Sigrid realize that there was another person who was culpable in this matter. "Oh, Edward. If you want to vent your anger, vent it on the Finn family."

George was satisfied. "This matter will not involve the Vincent family."

Hearing this, Sigrid breathed a sigh of relief. "When shall we go back? Can you take me home?"

She wanted to get home and ask Rebecca, that b*tch, what she had meant by posting this blog?

It was clear that it was Rebecca who had cheated on George before the wedding, but she said that George had had an affair with Sigrid before the wedding, and she also called Sigrid his mistress. Sigrid had never seen such a brazen person!
