

Chapter 23 Going Home with Her

Alyssa looked at the fleeing man, and her heart was filled with contempt.

She thought of how Ryan grabbed her arms earlier and patted her clothes with a disgusted look in her eyes as if she was worried about some kind of virus.

Staring at the woman, Leon revealed a grim expression, asking, "Did you ask that guy to come? How do you feel now after being caught by me? Do you want to leave me and be with Ryan so badly?"

"Huh?" Alyssa looked up at the man, asking, "When did I say I want to leave?"

"You don't have to tell me. I am not blind and have seen it all."

"No, I didn't ask him to come. He saw me and just showed up out of the blue." Alyssa noticed the cake store across the street. For fear that Leon would not buy her words, she pointed to the camera, suggesting, "There's surveillance at the store over there. Let's go and check what happened exactly."

Leon did not move, but Alyssa dragged him to the store.

About ten minutes later...

Leon witnessed what Ryan had just done to Alyssa.

Alyssa showed a firm attitude to disassociate herself from Ryan, but the bastard kept bugging her.

When Leon took his eyes off the footage, he saw Alyssa having a piece of cake.

She seemed to have forgotten what had just happened and was enjoying the dessert in peace.

She was having a chocolate cake with a strawberry dotted on the top.

Leon noticed that the woman had almost eaten up the layer of chocolate.

The man remembered the woman's preferences by heart in silence.

Alyssa noticed that Leon finished watching the footage, then ate up the piece of cake swiftly and said in a gentle voice, "It's true that I dated Ryan before. But I am now married to you, and I'll be a loyal wife. It'll be better if we make a baby soon. I want our life to be stabilized."

Leon did not expect the woman to say these words and froze on the spot.

She actually said she wanted to make a baby with him.

Staring back at Leon, Alyssa reached out to hold his hand. "Honey, let's go home."

Leon came to his senses and took out the piece of white jade, asking, "Do you think your Grandpa will like this item?"

"It's gorgeous. Grandpa will love it."

"That'll be great. Let's visit your grandfather then."

"You mean that we're going to the Grahams's house?"

Leon nodded and handed the woman a tissue.

Alyssa took the tissue to wipe the corners of her mouth and smiled heartily.

Half an hour later...

Alyssa and Leon arrived at the Graham Family's residence.

Grandpa Graham warmly invited Leon to play chess with him in the study.

Alyssa returned to her bedroom and looked around with an apparent smile on her mouth.

Everything was real but not a dream. Alyssa was back in her twenties.

She felt so lucky that all those beloved ones were around.

At this moment, Alyssa heard footsteps out there.

She walked out, saw Mom and Dad back home, and rushed over to them.

"Mom and Dad, you're home."

Mom reached out to hold Alyssa's hand, asking, "Alyssa, my girl, when did you come back? Why didn't you call Mom?"

"I wasn't sure whether I could come over or not either." Although Alyssa wanted to come back this day, Leon was busy. In the end, however, the man fulfilled her wish anyway.

It seemed that Leon cared about her. This thought cheered Alyssa up.

"You are a married woman now and should mind your behavior all the time. Did you come back alone?" Dad glared at Alyssa with a bit of dissatisfaction, saying, "Didn't I...Well, forget it. Alyssa, I think you should go back to the Hunters. This is not your home any longer. You and Leon are married, so you must treat the Hunter Family as your family and stop being a capricious girl."

"Dad, I..."

"I mean it, just go home." He took Alyssa's hand and continued, "If you are not leaving, I will have to take you back myself."

The moment Dad finished his words, he heard Grandpa Hunter and Leon chatting behind him.

Leon?

Why was he here?

Did he come back with Alyssa?

Dad turned his head, and he instantly saw his father and Leon standing in the doorway of the study.

At the Graham Family's dining room...

"Leon, you're very welcome to visit us regularly with Alyssa whenever you are available. This is also your home. Come to play chess with Grandpa to kill my lonely time."

Grandpa Graham stared at Leon with a happy smile, then said to Alyssa, "You are now Leon's wife and must take good care of him. No more fooling around, you hear me?"

Noticing Grandpa playing with the white jade in his palm, Alyssa knew he loved it.

Leon was quite good at pleasing the seniors. Alyssa thought to herself, "Look how hearty Grandpa's smile is!"

"Yes, you should listen to your Grandpa. Alyssa, you are Leon's wife, so you must take good care of him." Dad looked at Alyssa, then somehow felt lost that his dear daughter was currently part of another family and lowered his head in silence.

Mom added some food into Alyssa's bowl, saying in a tender voice, "It seems that you've lost some weight over the past few days. Eat more."

Alyssa smiled, then replied, "Grandpa, Dad, and Mom, Leon and I are getting along well. No worries about that. We're now a couple, and I will certainly take good care of Leon, right?"

Leon looked into Alyssa's eyes and found himself in there.

He nodded, saying, "Alyssa and I will be fine."

He lowered his head to pick up a piece of fish skin for Alyssa.

The fish skin was her favorite dish.

He remembered this well, and whenever there was fish skin on the table, he would get some for his wife.

The man's tender and loving behavior moved Alyssa profoundly.

She picked up a prawn and peeled it off for him.

The intimate interaction between them surprised the Graham Family.

Dad was mostly shocked. Witnessing his daughter, who used to be proud and immature, peeling off the skin of shrimp for Leon, he became speechless.

Did anything happen to Alyssa? What was wrong with her?

She actually volunteered to peel off shrimps for Leon. Did not she once vow to not marry Leon?

She behaved normally, though.

Was Alyssa in love with Leon?

Dad stared at Alyssa and told himself that it would be nice if she fell in love with Leon.

Alyssa realized that her father was staring at her, then added a piece of meat into his bowl, saying, "Dad, you look thinner. Have some meat. Please take good care of yourself when I'm not around, and Grandpa and Mom, you too. My husband and I will be fine, and all of us will be fine."

Alyssa thought of the last moment she saw her father in the previous life and told herself to cherish him dearly in this life.

Dad was touched by Alyssa's words, replying, "Although you're no longer around in the house, I will be satisfied to learn that you and Leon are getting along well."

Alyssa turned to look at Leon with great affection. "I understand."

"Alyssa has grown up after the marriage, and it's nice." Grandpa Graham looked at Alyssa, asking, "Aren't those pictures I took for you at the wedding beautiful?"
