

A Cue for Love Chapter 840

Unintentional

The press conference regarding the acquisition of Dexmed Pharmaceutical went on without a hitch.

Natalie requested photos of the event from the Public Relations Department and had them printed out on the spot.

After the event ended, Natalie left Dream Pharmaceutical and bought two bouquets of fresh flowers before heading to a cemetery on the outskirts of town.

Next to Jennie's tombstone was a newly installed tombstone for Yara.

Natalie bent over and placed a bouquet of lilies before each tombstone.

"Mom, Yara, I'm here to see you."

Yara had never gotten over the fact that Jennie had brought Natalie away instead of her in the past. Now that Yara had passed away, Natalie took it upon herself to arrange Yara's tombstone beside their mother's.

Natalie's hair fluttered gently in the breeze.

She pushed her hair behind her ear and knelt. Then, she set fire to the photos of the press conference for Dexmed Pharmaceutical's acquisition and tossed them into the small censer before her mother's tombstone.

Flames licked at the photographs and rapidly turned them into a pile of ashes.

Natalie muttered, "Mom, I've taken back Granddad's Dexmed Pharmaceutical."

Her lips curved into a faint smile as determination filled her gaze.

She continued, "I'll do my best to run Dexmed Pharmaceutical and practice Granddad's principles. The company will strive to bring life-saving medication to the public and contribute to the well-being of society. But Mom, I'm going to defy your wishes. I want to uncover my background and investigate Blaze, the organization Granddad betrayed in the past. It's going to be dangerous, but both you and Granddad have always told me that we can't only think of ourselves. With power comes responsibility. Granddad chose to fight against them, and as his granddaughter and your daughter, I'm following in his footsteps, and I won't stop until I uncover the truth."

After that, Natalie got on her knees before Jennie's tombstone and muttered a prayer before leaving.

Meanwhile, Samuel was busy decorating the greenhouse where he planned to propose to Natalie.

He wanted to create an unforgettable proposal for her. To that end, he hired a landscape architect to decorate the venue. Nonetheless, Samuel showed up to supervise the preparation process and ensure everything was done to perfection.

Justin thought he was about to go blind from the number of pink roses in the greenhouse.

“Samuel, you’re doomed! You’re a lovesick fool!”

“I am.” Samuel added, “I would gladly make the same choices even if I have countless chances to change my fate.”

Justin wondered why he agreed to help Samuel decorate the proposal venue and subject himself to a cringefest.

Samuel’s still the same as always, yet when he turns up the dial on romance, he’s a gushy sight.

Amid Justin’s musings, Samuel said, “Stop daydreaming, Justin. Help me move these flowers.”

“Yes, yes!”

Justin dared not poke fun at his friend and obediently moved the flowers as instructed.

After a busy morning, the setting for the proposal began to take shape.

Justin and Samuel left the greenhouse and walked onto a grassy field outside.

The former had been itching for some proper sparring for a while, and he playfully punched Samuel’s chest.

The punch drew a groan out of Samuel, who even stumbled a couple of steps backward.

Justin had used a lot of strength because his abilities were far weaker than Samuel’s.

In fact, Samuel could easily dodge Justin’s punch with his sharp senses. Hence, Justin had not expected that Samuel would be unable to evade his attack and even be caught off guard.

“Are you all right, Sam?” A panicky Justin explained, “I was just fooling around. I thought you would dodge my punch. I swear, I wasn’t trying to attack you on the sly!”

A Cue for Love Chapter 841

Caught Off Guard

Samuel clutched his chest and involuntarily frowned.

He pursed his lips tightly as his gaze darkened. Justin watched his expression warily, clueless about what was going on in his friend’s mind.

Justin said, “I really didn’t do it on purpose, Samuel.”

“I know,” Samuel replied lightly while staring at Justin.

Still uneasy, Justin asked, “Are you really okay? What happened just now, Samuel? It’s so weird! Why didn’t you dodge my punch earlier?”

“I couldn’t be bothered to evade it.” Samuel’s tone remained nonchalant as though the punch had scarcely affected him.

“That makes sense now!” Justin was immensely relieved by his reply. “Based on your abilities, you would’ve expected my punch.”

“Yes.”

“That’s great! Well, I’m going to arrange for lunch now.” Justin turned around and headed to a restaurant to order their lunch.

Once he was safely out of Justin’s sight, Samuel clutched his chest again. Several coughs racked his body, and he was shocked to taste blood near his throat.

It turned out that he had been lying to Justin all along.

He had not sensed his friend’s punch, so he could not react in time to evade the attack.

What the heck happened?

Samuel's eyes narrowed in thought.

Slowly, he lifted his hand and clenched his fist. He tried to feel the energy around his joints and muscles, and he came to the sinking realization that his strength was gradually ebbing away.

How could this happen? Natalie had already administered the antidote. It should've neutralized the accelerated-aging poison in my body. I've been resting all this while too, so I shouldn't feel this way.

Suddenly, a frightening thought crossed Samuel's mind.

What if it's because of something else?

Several days later, Natalie went shopping with Yana.

Her pregnant belly was even more obvious now, though her waist still appeared slim from behind.

Yana grew even more radiant as her pregnancy progressed.

Her simple get-up failed to conceal her brimming motherly sentiment.

She immediately clasped Natalie's hand and exclaimed, "We haven't seen each other in forever, Natalie!"

"Exactly!" Natalie smiled and added, "That's why I came once you invited me."

"That's great!"

Natalie accompanied Yana as the latter browsed the children's section.

Every piece of clothing and toy caught Yana's fancy, and she went on a massive shopping spree in the store.

By the time she was done shopping, Yana was exhausted, so the two of them decided to grab a meal at a nearby restaurant.

"Have you and Hans thought of the baby's name, Yana?" asked Natalie.

"Not yet." Yana shook her head and lamented, "My dad and Hans' dad have been debating names for the past two days. It's a close competition, and there's no clear winner in sight."

“Well, whose suggestion do you like better?”

Yana could not help but rub her temples when she heard Natalie’s question. “Is ‘neither’ an option? My dad’s keen on picking a name from The Republic, while my father-in-law is eyeing Shakespeare’s Sonnets. Their argument has gone beyond the baby’s name to the literary significance of the works. I don’t know how these two old men have the energy to argue until they’re both red in the face.”

She immediately burst into laughter after finishing her sentence.

Natalie could not help but join in when she imagined their fight.

Yana and Hans’ long-awaited second child was already the apple of the Weiss and Becker families before it was even born.

After Yana updated Natalie on her situation, she asked, “Enough about me. What’s going on with you and Samuel? When is he going to marry my sister?”

A Cue for Love Chapter 842

Spilling The Beans

Natalie knew Yana bore no ill will in asking about her future marriage plans.

As her godsister, Yana merely wished to know when Samuel and Natalie would officially become husband and wife.

Nonetheless, it did not seem as though marriage was on the immediate horizon for Natalie.

As such, Natalie answered candidly, “We don’t have any plans at the moment.”

Yana had assumed that they did not publicize news of their marriage for privacy, yet she was surprised to learn that Samuel had not proposed to Natalie at all.

She hastily replied, “I was just curious, Natalie.”

“Don’t worry. I won’t read too much into it.” Natalie nodded reassuringly before meeting Yana’s gaze and adding, “Samuel and I have been through a lot together, Yana. He’s the one for me. A marriage certificate is just a piece of paper to me. I don't need it to prove our commitment to one another."

Natalie meant every word of what she said about her relationship with Samuel.

Samuel's feelings and sincerity toward her were more important than any of those formalities.

Yana grasped her hand and uttered, "I've been through a lot to gain you as a younger sister. I just want you to be happy and safe."

"I will." Natalie smiled and nodded.

After their meal, they left the shopping mall.

The overprotective Hans was already waiting to pick Yana up at the shopping mall entrance.

Natalie bid Yana farewell before returning to the Bowers residence.

Justin happened to be in, and he was so absorbed in a phone call that he did not hear Natalie entering.

At that moment, he continued chatting on the phone, "I can't come back yet. Samuel's going to propose soon, and I'm helping to decorate the venue. He's treating your poor brother like a slave. The decorations should be up by next week. I'll come back to Livingsfill then."

Natalie could easily hear every word of his phone conversation.

After hanging up on his call to his sister, Justin turned around and immediately saw Natalie standing not far behind him. He was so surprised that he almost dropped his phone.

"W-When did you come in?" Justin silently prayed that Natalie had not heard anything as it would ruin Samuel's surprise.

Natalie shot him a cheeky smile and drawled, "Oh, right about the time you mentioned helping Samuel to decorate the proposal venue."

Instantly, Justin panicked.

D*mn it! This is a disaster! Samuel has been keeping the proposal venue decoration under wraps to give Natalie a surprise! He's going to kill me now that Natalie has heard all about it from my big mouth before the decorations are even complete!

He pasted on an awkward smile and sputtered, "You must have misheard me!"

"I didn't!" Natalie smiled and insisted, "I heard everything clearly. You said the decorations would be done in a week, allowing you to leave Dellmoor and return to Livingsfill."

Justin knew then that he was doomed.

Nonetheless, Justin made a last-ditch attempt to save himself. He clasped his hands together in desperation and pleaded, "My dear future sister-in-law, could you please keep this piece of knowledge to yourself? He really wants to surprise you, and all his efforts will be down the drain if you know about it. He's going to kill me for this! You have no idea what lengths Samuel has gone to in order to give you an unforgettable proposal. The landscape architects and I are struggling to keep up with his fantastical ideas."

Natalie's heart warmed after hearing Justin's pleas.

The proposal was one thing, yet it was Samuel's effort and love that touched her.

He has always been like this! He doesn't say a thing but tries to give me the best of everything!

With that thought in mind, Natalie walked toward Justin and patted his shoulder. She reassured him, "Don't worry, Justin! I can keep a secret."

"You said so yourself! Don't rat me out!" Justin felt as if a weight had been lifted off his shoulders. "Just pretend you don't know anything and wait for Samuel's surprise! Though you already know about his preparations, I guarantee you'll still be bowled over by the actual event."
