I am a quadrillionaire chapter 1920-The cores of the family was annihilated.

Thus, the only one who could support the Simmons family today was the founder.

The most important thing right now was to recover, take revenge, and lead the Simmons family back to glory.

The resources and background were not important.

Shortly after David and Sahar left, a space crack appeared in the void they fought.

Then, a tall figure stepped out of it.

After feeling the traces of the battle, he did not go to the Simmons Continent to inquire about the situation, instead, he turned around and left without saying a word.

Sahar, a powerhouse who reached peak True Saint Rank in his heyday, never discovered his existence this entire time.

Only David, who had a strong mind power, felt a strong person approaching from a long distance.

What happened on the Simmons Continent spread quickly.

Even Sahar's full blockade did not help.

In this age of information, countless people on the Simmons Continent witnessed the battle.

Although they did not know the outcome of the battle in the void, they witnessed Nek, the Pre-Saint, being killed, and the Simmons family's core getting wiped out.

While David and Sahar went to fight in the air, people from other forces had already sent out relevant information about this conflict.

The death of a strong Pre-Saint quickly fermented, causing an uproar in the entire Star Kingdom.

That was a Saint, not a nobody.

In the eyes of ordinary people, Saints were like gods.

They possessed endless longevity.

They would not have to go through the Eternal Catastrophe that would happen once in an epoch.

They could even live as long as heaven and earth, and shine with the sun and the moon.

They were the object of envy and adoration by all.

However, a Saint died just like that?

Only then did everyone realize that Saints were also mortal.

It was so easy for a True Saint to kill a Pre-Saint.

What happened on the Simmons Continent directly overshadowed the event in West End of the Central Sacred Continent where the four True Saints fought.

What was even more shocking was that the culprit of these two incidents was the same person.

Nek's death once again pushed David's name into the spotlight.

No one expected that David, who just defeated the old True Saint Tai of the Palmore family in West End of the Central Sacred Continent, to suddenly appear in the Simmons Continent to kill Nek, the new Pre-Saint.

David rose to fame in Star Kingdom.

He was extremely popular at that moment.

When the Fellowes family got the news, they all laughed bitterly.

David did not follow the rules at all!

However, this was in line with the personality of a young True Saint and the disciple of a Sacred Saint.

He killed a Pre-Saint just because he wanted to, regardless of the rules.

Even if the Saints Association learned of this, they would not do anything for the sake of David's master, the Sacred Saint who was hiding in the dark.

The rules were set by powerful people, and David's master was undoubtedly such a person.

It was possible before long, David would also step into the ranks.

Even the head of the Saints Association would have to show respect to a sect with two Sacred Saints.

The Fellowes family did not know what grievances David had with the Simmons family, nor would they pay attention to it.

In this situation, it did not matter who was right nor who was wrong.

What matters was that Nek, the Saint, was dead.

Moreover, the murderer was David, who had needed the protection of the Fellowes family not long ago.
