

Chapter 1134 Please Apologize

Hannah had been waiting in the VIP room for Janet. She took comfort in the room's luxurious decor and glittering crystal chandeliers.

She was overjoyed that Janet had been able to secure a good job.

A female worker then entered the VIP room with desserts. "Miss Hamilton brought back sweets and tea for everyone. She asked me to bring some to the client in the VIP room."

Both the black tea and the pastries looked appetizing and had a pleasant aroma.

"Are these desserts really for me?" Hannah was flattered. She studied the plate of desserts and thought them to be so exquisite.

"Yes, it's for you. Don't worry." After putting down the desserts, the female worker left the room with the tray.

Hannah thanked her and waited for her to leave before she picked up the dessert from the table and examined it carefully. The sound of the door opening came at this moment.

"Who are you?" When Mandy opened the door, she noticed an old lady in plain clothes squatting by the tea table. Her brow furrowed as she said indifferently, "Alright. You can go clean up the floor outside. I have an important client arriving shortly."

Mandy removed her white suit jacket and began sorting the documents she needed for the client today. Seeing the old lady still squatting there, she impatiently walked over. "Hey, are you deaf? I've told you to clean the floor outside. I have a client meeting here soon and you will ruin it."

As Mandy approached, she caught the old woman putting the dessert she had prepared for her client into her pocket.

Mandy muttered sarcastically, "Are you stealing? These desserts are for my client."

After saying that, she turned around and opened the door. "Security, come in and take this woman out. And call the police to report that there's a thief here."

After telling them what had happened, Hannah turned to Janet and said, "You have to trust me, Janet. I'm not stealing anything." Hannah was panicking. She had never been treated so unfairly all her life.

Patting Hannah's back to comfort her, Janet said, "Don't worry, Hannah. I'll help you."

She gave Mandy a stern look and said, "This is my first client as an independent designer. For me, she is more important than any client. What you did to her was wrong, Mandy. Please apologize to her."

"What did you say? You want me to apologize?" Mandy sneered in disbelief.

Honestly, she felt a twinge of shame. Although she had now realized she made a mistake, her pride forbade her from apologizing to the poor woman she had wronged.

However, there were a lot of people present, and everyone was watching.

Mandy felt she had no choice under Janet's hard stare. She gritted her teeth in hesitation before finally looking at the old woman. "I'm sorry."

She was so ashamed that she rushed out of the door, regardless of whether or not Hannah would accept her apology.

However, Janet was not satisfied. She could feel that Mandy was insincere. "That's not how you apologize."

She was about to chase after Mandy, but Hannah quickly stopped her. "I think she's a little embarrassed. Let her go. Don't give her a hard time."

Hearing this, Janet sighed in resignation.

"I didn't expect that a big shot would suddenly join us. Did Mr. Wesley ask her to help manage the studio?" Janet looked at Mandy, who was not far away. She had a bad first impression of Mandy, the new designer here. 5

Elizabeth took Janet somewhere else and whispered, "She's Mr. Wesley's friend and a famous designer. They are now working on a big project together. That is why she has been dropping by frequently. But she is not officially employed by the company. She was once well-known in New York's fashion industry for her luxury style. Her design concept was to serve rich people. Don't let such a misunderstanding cause a rift between you two. Who knows? One day you two may be able to work together."

"No wonder." Janet's expression didn't change at all. "But I'm not that narrow-minded. She has apologized, so I'll let this pass."

"That's good. Let's go over and formally introduce ourselves. After all, you will see each other often in the future." The two women walked over arm in arm.

"Mandy, what happened earlier was a misunderstanding. Let me formally introduce you to each other. This is Janet." Elizabeth winked at Janet and nudged her.

Flashing a smile, Mandy scanned Janet from head to toe.