

Chapter 1398 Janet's Personal Bodyguard

At the private airfield owned by the Larson Group, a massive helicopter was parked on a wide expanse of lawn.

As luggage was being loaded onto the aircraft, Janet, filled with apprehension, oversaw the process. She occasionally issued instructions to the workers, cautioning them to handle the luggage delicately.

"Sweetheart, there's no need for you to supervise this yourself," Brandon chided with a chuckle, playfully pinching Janet's nose. "My team is reliable and careful. You can trust them."

His attempts to dissuade her fell on deaf ears as Janet continued her vigilant watch, uttering, "No, my designs for the show are in this luggage. They can't be jostled or knocked about; they require careful handling."

As she spoke, she rushed over to one of the workers, stopping him hastily. "Please be cautious, my designs are in that piece."

Seeing her dedication, Brandon chuckled silently to himself, refraining from further attempts to convince her otherwise.

Since this was Janet's inaugural participation in a fashion show as an independent designer, her anxious vigilance was natural. He decided to let her handle it her way.

Sean, trailing close behind Brandon, could only shake his head and inwardly grumble about how adept Brandon was becoming at handling Janet's peculiarities, as if he was her personal bodyguard.

Sensing something amiss, Brandon shot a frosty look in Sean's direction.

Startled, Sean tried to placate Brandon with a quick smile. Internally, he quaked, "Does Mr.
Larson have some sort of mind-reading ability?
That's horrifying!"

While Janet was engrossed in overseeing the luggage, her assistant, Lexi, was also working diligently. Holding a notebook, Lexi meticulously cross-checked and recorded the count of each piece of luggage.

As her first time participating in such a significant event as Janet's assistant, Lexi was even more apprehensive than Janet. She feared that any error on her part might result in Janet's failure.

"Yes, this one's correct... and so is that one," she muttered under her breath, recording each piece.

Only after confirming the correctness of all luggage did she let out a sigh of relief, wiping the sweat from her brow.

Janet, noticing Lexi's anxiety, couldn't help but smile. "Lexi, don't stress too much. Think of this as a fun trip."

However, Lexi shook her head in immediate denial. "No, I must carry out my responsibilities thoroughly and not let you down."

Witnessing Lexi's earnestness and determination warmed Janet's heart. She patted Lexi's shoulder, saying, "Thank you for your hard work. I'll give you a bonus after the fashion show as a reward."

Bonus!

Lexi's eyes lit up, but she quickly shook her head a moment later.

Janet looked at her, puzzled. "What's the matter? Do you want something else instead? If there's something else you desire, just let me know. I'll do my best to fulfill it."

Lexi responded earnestly, "Boss, this is part of my job. Besides, I consider myself incredibly lucky to attend such a significant event with you and to have this opportunity to travel abroad and broaden my perspective."

Touched by Lexi's sincerity, the smile on Janet's face grew brighter. "You're deserving of this reward for all your hard work. It's not easy to find an employee like you who's so considerate of her boss. I wouldn't want anyone to steal you away," she expressed with gratitude.

"I'm not leaving," Lexi murmured softly, her heart swelling with joy at Janet's compliment.

"What did you say?" Janet asked, unable to catch Lexi's quiet words.

"Nothing," Lexi responded, glancing over at Brandon, who was standing a fair distance away. She then leaned in to whisper to Janet, "Boss, this is the first time I've seen such a luxurious private jet. I used to only see them on TV."

Pausing briefly, her eyes sparkled as she added, "I never thought I'd have the opportunity to not only see one up close but also experience traveling in such luxury. Even if the job can be exhausting, I feel it's totally worth it!"

Observing the pure excitement shining in Lexi's eyes, Janet felt her anxiety easing. Her smile became increasingly radiant. 1
