

A pair of fair and long legs stepped out of the car.

The woman then walked over to Andrius with a soft smile. It was Suletta, the granddaughter of the old man that Andrius had saved the other day.

The old man was Anthony Henderson, the richest man in Sumeria.

When Suletta saw Andrius doing laborious work and moving luggage around, she was shocked.

“Mr. Moonshade, thank you for saving my grandfather yesterday. If not for you, my grandfather might not have made it.”

Andrius recognized her, but since he was in the middle of moving Rainbow’s luggage, he simply hummed a reply and did not extend the conversation.

“Mr. Moonshade, you’ve done our family a great deed by saving my grandfather! Tell me how we should reward you.” Suletta somehow looked proud when she made the offer.

Whatever Andrius requested, the Hendersons could make it happen.

Andrius said, “It’s a doctor’s duty to save people. If you really want to thank me, a simple ‘thank you’ is more than enough.”

Suletta found it amusing. She was born into a wealthy family, and money was God to her. She believed that money had the power to move everything in the world. A doctor’s duty was nothing but an excuse.

He did not have time for the granddaughter of some rich man in a city.

“Do you know her?” Rainbow asked. “What does she want with you?”

She was standing further away and did not hear the conversation between Suletta and Andrius.

Andrius simply said, “She wanted to give me five billion, but I said no.”

Rainbow spat her boba tea out.

Fortunately, Andrius dodged it quickly, or else he would have been sprayed with saliva and boba.

“Andrius, you certainly are a brag!” Rainbow said with disdain.

Andrius did not bother to explain either.

After Suletta got into her car, she contacted her secretary, Bella Cornstacy.

“Bella, what did Mr. Moonshade mean?”

“Ms. Suletta, isn’t that obvious?” Bella wore a disdainful look. “Andrius Moonshade is super duper greedy! He thought that by saving Master Henderson, he can go overboard. He’s trying to get more from us. This is extortion!”

Suletta agreed.

She believed that Andrius knew who she was and that with the
