

Chapter 589 Bring Fuller Back Alive

Riel felt like he couldn't breathe under Liam's hard gaze. He stuttered in fear, "When we... chased after him, we discovered that the attacker was Fuller."

As soon as he heard Fuller's name, Liam's eyes turned bloodshot. He turned and walked out of the hospital with heavy steps, murmuring under his breath, "You again, Fuller. You escaped last time out of luck. This time, I'll take you and your whole family down."

Closely following after Liam, Riel tentatively suggested, "Fuller must be in Salem. Give me a chance to make up for my mistake, King. Let me find him and bring him to you."

It was eerily silent after that.

After a while, Liam finally said, "Fine, but mark my words. This will be your last chance. If you fail again. I won't need you."

Riel nodded repeatedly, sweat pooling on his forehead.

Riel went down on one knee and said solemnly, "I promise not to let you down again."

With that, Riel left with his men.

He dispatched them to every corner of Salem in search of Fuller.

His men were at bus stations, airports, toll stations and on every path that could be used to leave Salem.

If Fuller was still in Salem, they would definitely find him.

Meanwhile, Fuller had no idea of what was going on.

After his recent success, he was so confident. He kept praising Nalani beside him, "This is all thanks to you. You really are amazing. You did a good job!"

Unlike Fuller, Nalani remained expressionless, still on alert. "I'm flattered, but I wish I was more powerful, then they would have definitely suffered more."

After a moment in silence, Nalani said, "Mr. Norris, I know you have big shots supporting you. I wonder if you can introduce them to me. If we join forces, I believe we can easily take down the Kingland Group."

Fuller stared at Nalani for a second, then took a piece of paper and scribbled a number down on it. "Here." He held out the paper. "Since we worked so well together this time, I'll give you his number. However, I can't promise if he'll agree to work with you or not."

With an imperceptible smile at the corners of her mouth, Nalani stood up to leave.

Filled with confidence after his success, Fuller began to prepare for the next plan.

What happened to Julie would certainly come as a huge blow to Liam and disorientate him. He had to take advantage of the situation now and blow up the building of the Kingland Group.

That was one hell of a plan.

Fuller was certain that Liam kept fighting back because he had the support of the Hoffman family. However, they only supported him because he still had the Kingland Group running.

So, what would happen if the Kingland Group was burnt to the ground? Liam wouldn't know what to tell the Hoffman family, and they would stop supporting him. Without their help, it would be easy to finish off with the bastard.

While he planned this out, Riel had already found out where he was and communicated the information to Liam.

A large number of men had already surrounded him without his knowing.

When Riel sent his men out, he gave them one special order. He wanted them to bring Fuller back alive.

He had to hand Fuller over to Liam personally.

Chapter 590 Betrayal

In the building of Kingland Group.

As soon as Fuller's troop of cars stopped, they were surrounded by a group of armed fighters.

Fuller's expression changed as his heart started racing. "Do not do whatever it is you want to do," he warned.

He wasn't a fool. Armed men like these ones wouldn't surround him like this to have tea and chat with him.

Fuller then gave a signal to his men, and they immediately opened the box in the car, revealing the explosives that were meant to blow up the Kingland Group building.

Fuller looked at the armed men and threatened, "I'm sure you know what this is. If the bomb explodes, it will reduce to ashes everything within one kilometre. So I'd advice you to let us go, or we will die together."

Fuller spoke in the name of everyone with him, but they were not of the same opinion. Beside him, for example, Hiram frowned.

He was still a young strong man with a bright future ahead of him. He had worked so hard for the Norris family for years. He wasn't going to die a miserable death in Salem.

Riel's men didn't attack after Fuller's threat. Not because they were scared, but because they were waiting for Liam as they were ordered to.

It wasn't long before Liam's Porsche stopped between the two teams.

He got out of the car and walked directly to Fuller, his expression stone cold. "Were you alone, or did the Hewitt and Duncan families have a hand in it?"

Fuller shrank back from the intensity Liam was pouring out. He knew he couldn't back down, so he quickly collected himself and replied haughtily, "You can't do anything to me. The bomb I have here is not as small as the one Dark Fiend had last time. If you touch me, we will perish together."

As he spoke, he proudly showed the bomb, as if he was really ready to detonate it.

Next to him, Hiram's face was pale.

He could already tell that Liam had come here prepared to fight to death. And if he had to, he knew that the crazy Fuller wouldn't hesitate to detonate the bomb.

For Fuller, it wouldn't be a problem since he would be killing Liam, his greatest nemesis as well.

But Hiram didn't see what he could win from it. He couldn't die here in Salem when he still had so much to do.

Hiram made up his mind in a split second and suddenly slapped Fuller across the face. He took advantage of Fuller's shock to grab the detonator in his hand and jumped out of the car window.

"Go to hell! I won't die with you!" he shouted.

Then, he raised his hand and looked at Liam, stepping back as he said, "This was all Fuller's plan. I was forced to help him. You can get even with him. I'll leave now."

As soon as he took a step, a gunshot rang out.

A bullet hit him in the forehead and he fell down with a thud.

Riel lowered his gun and walked towards him.

Hiram deserved to die. If the man hadn't stopped him in the hospital, he would have been able to protect Julie.

He snatched the detonator away from the dead man's body, taking away Fuller's only hope of survival.

Fuller swallowed loudly, finally beginning to panic. His voice lowered considerably and he struggled to say, "You were the one who killed my son first. I was only avenging him."

Chapter 591 The End Of Fuller

Fuller's words were barely out of his mouth when Liam grabbed him harshly and dragged him out of the car. Liam threw him with force on the hard ground and slapped him across the face.

With bloodshot eyes, Liam roared into his face, "Avenging your son? Your son was the one that came for me first. He used the power of the Norris family to do whatever he wanted in Salem. He was the one that came looking for death. You should have done whatever you wanted with me only and never touched my unborn child."

No matter what Fuller did to him, he would have taken it like a big man.

After all, they were in battle. Even if Fuller had killed Liam during the battle, he would have accepted it.

But he dared to attack his woman and his unborn child. That was unforgivable.

Fuller didn't really have anything to say to get himself out of this mess. He said coldly, "Whatever you say doesn't matter anymore. You have the advantage now. Just kill me already."

Fuller knew that he had hit the wall. Liam had him by the balls today. It was better to act like he was ready to die.

Liam let out a scary chuckle. "You want to die? No way. You won't have it so easy." Then, he turned to Riel and raised his voice. "Riel, do you remember how those mercenaries treated traitors when we were in the delta region?"

Riel nodded. How could he forget?

The mercenaries in the delta region were famous for their cruelty. But they were even more ruthless with traitors. They would cut off the traitors' limbs first, tie them to turtles and throw them in a desert filled with explosive mines.

The turtles would move slowly, and as bombs detonated, they would blow the traitors up bit by bit until they died.

Liam nodded and said, "I'm glad you still remember it. It should be a great experience for Fuller here."

Riel was a tough, cruel man, yet Liam's decision still shocked him.

Still, he was going to follow the order and give Fuller just what he deserved. After the shock wore off, he asked his men to take Fuller away.

Before leaving, Liam shot one last look at Fuller who was sweating profusely. "Don't worry. I promise not to keep you waiting too long. All your family members will join you in hell in no time."

If the Norris family had let it go after he got rid of Clarence, he would have let it go as well.

But since they remained adamant and went as far as hurting the woman he loved and his unborn child, they were going to regret it.

Fuller couldn't do anything. All he knew was that Liam would keep his word. He stared blankly as he was dragged away.

In the hospital.

Liam went back to see Julie.

She had just come out of the ICU when he arrived. The doctor said that the placenta was broken, and they couldn't save the foetus.

Fortunately, after the rescue, Julie's vital signs were stable.

When she was out of danger, the doctor had to perform a dilation and curettage procedure.

Her body was very weak, but if it wasn't done, leaving the dead foetus in her would only cause more complications for her health.

Liam stared down at the weak

Julie on the bed, his heart breaking at the sight.

He wanted to say something, but he was so overwhelmed by so many emotions that he settled with holding Julie's hand tightly and staying by her side.

Chapter 592 Back In Invone

Three days and nights had passed since Julie's surgery.

Liam didn't leave her alone in the hospital for even a second. He kept watch by her, tears hanging in his eyes the whole time. He was so tired that he had dark circles under his eyes.

It was not until the fourth morning that Julie finally woke up. She slowly opened her eyes until a haggard Liam came into view.

She stared at him and asked with quivering lips, "Liam, our baby...

Is it safe?"

Liam opened his mouth to answer her, but nothing came out. Finally, he just shook his head sullenly.

Julie felt like she was running out of breath. Her body shook all over as she let out gut-wrenching cries.

When the fake nurse stabbed her belly with a knife, she expected something like this. But being faced with the reality of it was much more painful than she had anticipated.

When Julie was still in a coma, Liam thought about how he would tell Julie about the loss of the baby. He knew she would be devastated, and wanted to say the right words.

But in this moment, he felt numb. All he could offer was his presence. He held Julie tightly, letting her know he was there.

The sound of her cries tore at his heart like a thousand daggers. He was going to eliminate the Norris family in the most painful way ever.

They were going to pay for this.

He would make sure of it.

Julie braved through her physical pain and weakness to push Liam away from her.

All she could think of in that moment, was the child she had lost. The child that never got to see the light of day. She curled into a ball in a corner of the bed, tears streaming down her face as she murmured repeatedly, "My baby, my baby..."

Liam took a deep breath to control his emotions and tried to comfort Julie. "You need to rest. The baby won't be happy to see its mother in so much pain."

When he got no reaction from her, he stood up and swore, "I promise that I'm going to get even with them for this. I just need you to take good care of yourself. Once you leave the hospital, we'll get married and have another child. But first, I have to take my revenge. Anyone who hurt you will pay dearly for it. When everything is over, I'll hold the biggest wedding with you."

These words didn't comfort Julie in any way. Her eyes remained glassy, as if she wasn't in this world.

It seemed that along with her baby, her heart had died.

The sight was too painful for Liam to take. He walked out of the hospital and headed straight to the airport.

He was going back to Invone.

The plane landed at the airport of Invone in the afternoon.

When Liam walked out of the airport, he didn't go straight to the Norris family's house to exact his revenge.

He was furious, yes, but he still had all his senses with him.

Compared to Invone, Salem was rather a simple city. He couldn't just barge in and act without thinking like he would in Salem. Besides, after being away from Invone for so many years, he didn't know exactly how things functioned here. He had to study the area lest his actions put him at a disadvantage.

So, instead of going to the Norris household, he went directly to the Hoffman family's house.

It had been many years since he left this place. His memories of the place were a little vague.

To his surprise, when he stepped into the compound, everything seemed to be the same as it was in his memories.

A few days ago, the Hoffman family had been attacked by external forces, but one would never see that looking at the house now. Everything was in place.

While the decorations were still there, the faces he saw were not the same faces he knew. Now that Liam had a special identity, he couldn't just walk in and see Sergio directly. First, he was taken to see Theo.

Since the last time they parted with each other in Salem, Theo went back to the Hoffman family's house to deal with the aftermath of the attacks and didn't have the time to return to Salem.

Theo was very happy to see Liam. After they exchanged warm greetings, Theo took Liam directly to meet the contemporary head of the Hoffman family--Sergio Hoffman.