Chapter 1467

That sentence hit like a ton of bricks.

“Nobody’s taking her anywhere unless I say so.” After Steven sternly delivered this line, he immediately made a few phone calls, reaching out to experts all around the globe. No matter the cost, he was determined to bring Hannah back from the brink.

After two long, agonizing days and nights, Hannah was finally out of danger. Though her life was no longer hanging by a thread, there was still no sign of her waking up. The doctors said she would either wake up soon, or she would not wake up at all. It all hinged on her will to live.

He asked the doctors if she had a strong will to survive. They had no answers for him. They suggested he talk to her more and talk about things she was interested in. That was when he realized he didn’t even know what Hannah was truly interested in. So, he tried telling her all sorts of stories, hoping she would like at least one of them. But it didn’t seem to make a difference.

After over a month of anguish, she finally woke up. Just as he was about to embrace her with hope, she didn’t remember him anymore. She remembered everyone else, except him. She remembered everyone else, even Jeremy, who she wasn’t even close with. She had forgotten him, the man she used to share her bed and intimate moments with. At this, Steven gave a bitter smile. “Hannah, do you hate me that much? You hate me to the point you won’t even acknowledge that I was once part of your life.”

Maybe his voice disturbed her because Hannah suddenly furrowed her brows.

Steven quickly reached out to soothe her furrowed brows. “Hannah, what’s wrong? Are you feeling alright?”

Hannah didn’t respond and fell back into a deep sleep.

Again, Steven gently held her-hand. “Hannah, wherever you go, remember to call me, okay? You don’t know what it was like for me living without you. I know you wanted to leave me, I know you wanted a divorce, so I processed the divorce for us. But you don’t know, I never truly let you go. I want us to be together forever.”

No one responded, but he continued talking.

Hannah had no words. What on earth was Steven trying to do? Wasn't he always cold and harsh towards her? Now he wanted to play the part of the passionate lover?

In terms of acting, she was certain she wouldn't lose to him, but the problem was, she had no idea what this man was up to now.

Just as Hannah was about to be driven crazy by him, he started talking again, "Hannah, do you know that I love you?"

This man really was playing the passionate lover again. Any woman would be repulsed by a man like him.

Before they divorced, she had to rely on him to live, couldn't leave him, and had to play along. Now they'd been divorced for almost a year, and he was with his first love every day, who would want to play the lovey-dovey couple with her?

Hannah thought, "Go away! Stay away from me! Stop bothering me!"

But Steven said again, "Hannah, Daniela was never my first love. Nothing ever happened between us."

This man really pissed her off!

Chapter 1468

When he was head over heels for her, he was even willing to divorce Daniela for her sake. But now, he might not have loved her anymore, so he claimed he never had anything going on with Daniela

If there was nothing between them, how could he divorce for her sake? If there was nothing between them, how could they be together all this time?

Did he think she became an idiot just because she hurt her leg? He could actually come up with such a lame excuse to deceive her.

Then, Steven said again, 'All the stuff about Daniela and I are just rumors. I barely know her'

Upon hearing this, Hannah was on the verge of cussing him out. But she held it in. She wished this man would just scam Didn't he know playing dumb was tiring? She hoped he could just leave ASAP!

To her surprise, Steven's next words hit Hannah right in the feels. 'I've only had you, just you. I've never had any other woman.'

What on earth did he mean by that? Did he misspeak, or did she mishear?

Was he trying to tell her he never dated any other woman before he was with her? Was he trying to tell her he never laid a hand on any other woman, even after their divorce?

What a man! Was he trying to insult her intelligence?

Steven, Hannah..."

Hannah couldn't hold it in anymore, she opened her eyes, and snapped, "Steven, are you out of your mind? Just when I'm about to fall asleep, you're buzzing around like a damn fly. Can you not?"

Being scolded, Steven was surprisingly happy. "Hannah, you remember me?"

Hannah brushed off his hand. "I just woke up, and you're buzzing around like a damn fly. I injured my leg, not my brain. How could I not remember you?"

The glimmer in Steven's eyes died out. "Do you... really hate me that much?"

He asked, staring into her eyes. He wanted the real answer.

Hannah looked back at him, and without hesitation, she spat out, "Yes, I hate you! I feel sick whenever I see your face."

Steven heard it, saw it, but still couldn't believe it. "Really? Do I really disgust you that much?"

Hannah said harshly, “No matter how many times you ask, my answer is the same. So, can you just leave now and never come into my sight again? I really don’t want to see you again!”

She’d said these harsh words to him before, but they still hurt him deeply.

Steven didn’t know how he left Hannah’s room. All he felt was that it was getting colder and colder. It seemed like a wind was picking up outside.

Looking at his retreating back, Hannah felt a pang of regret for being so harsh. But every time she thought about what he did to her, the tiny regret would evaporate instantly.

Only fools stumbled over the same rock twice, she wouldn’t. No matter whether what he said was true or not!

That night. It was destined to be an unusual night.

Two black sedans drove up, one halted next to the gatehouse of the apartment complex where Cornelia was staying. As soon as the car came to a halt, several men in black suits got out.
