

Chapter 624 The Representative Of The...

In Tihirang.

In the hospital room, Julie found herself well-cared for, courtesy of the Duncan family. Her health gradually improved, despite her lack of freedom.

During her stay, Rennes visited her daily. At Julie's insistence, Nalani was also released.

Rennes instructed Nalani to look out for Julie, just as if they were still in Salem.

Maybe it was Rennes' influence, but the situation wasn't as dire as either had feared, although worry never fully left their minds.

Julie's main concern was the uncertainty surrounding Liam's arrival to rescue them.

She also felt a heavy burden of guilt, aware that Nalani's present circumstances were due to her involvement with Julie.

In a tone tinged with regret, Julie said, "Nalani, I'm truly sorry. You're in this mess because of me."

Feigning indifference, Nalani reassured her, "Don't think like that, Julie. We have to hold onto the belief that we'll be okay. We're still alive and well, aren't we?"

Although Julie was anxious, a glint of hope sparkled in her eyes. "Liam will rescue us. If we keep faith, we'll eventually see the light of day again."

Nalani nodded, but her eyes betrayed a fleeting chill.

She knew Liam would come. What bothered her now was Cannon's return to the delta region and the sense that she was forgotten here.

Rennes showed little interest in her, instead focusing his attentions on Julie.

Under these circumstances, her scheme stood no chance of succeeding. Compelled by Rennes' authority, she even became Julie's personal maid.

In this situation, Nalani was hoping Liam wouldn't arrive too soon to rescue them.

While they were engrossed in conversation, Rennes appeared outside the hospital room, making his regular visit to Julie.

This time, however, he was accompanied by Timothy in a suit.

Julie and Nalani, who had never encountered Timothy, were puzzled as to why Rennes had brought an unfamiliar face.

Timothy, equally bewildered, queried, "Mr. Duncan, are we going to talk here?"

Rather than directly addressing Timothy's question, Rennes first tenderly inquired after Julie, "How do you feel today?"

Julie's silence left Rennes visibly displeased.

Swiveling towards Timothy, he lashed out, "You're merely a son-in-law. Can you make decisions for the Sandoval family?"

At this, Timothy's expression darkened, but he suppressed his anger. "Mr. Duncan, since the Sandoval family sent me to discuss a partnership, I have the authority to represent them."

With a mocking sneer, Rennes retorted, "Timothy, watch your tone. Don't presume that marrying into the Sandoval family makes you my equal. Even if they value you, it doesn't mean you can exploit the Duncan family."
