

Chapter 731 The Crisis Of The Ramirez Family

After several days of waiting and testing, Rohan grew impatient and finally returned to Invone.

At the Ramirez's residence, Rohan, standing tall with his hands clasped behind him, was accompanied by Abbott, the Sandoval family patriarch, and Abbott's daughter, Adelina, to his right. To his left was Demetrius, the acting head of the Hoffman family.

Facing them was Sean Ramirez and his family.

Rohan's voice was icy. "Sean, let's keep this simple. Give us all the rare metals your family possesses. Isn't it better for everyone to remain unharmed?"

The Ramirez family stood their ground, unwilling to succumb to such a brazen demand.

Sean responded frostily, "What's your game? Leave now with your crew, and I might overlook your audacity."

His gaze, sharp and displeased, was directed at the Hoffman family.

Despite years of alliance with the Ramirez family, the Hoffman family now aided a stranger in intimidating them, leaving Sean bewildered and upset.

He was oblivious to the recent shifts within the Hoffman family.

Though tension crackled between the two sides, no one made the first move.

But this inaction wasn't out of Rohan's fear of Sean. Since Rohan showed up, it meant he was certain of his stance.

Again, Rohan's tone was chilling. "Continue this defiance, and I guarantee the Ramirez name will vanish. But if you cooperate, your family's safety can be ensured. Do you truly want to jeopardize the Ramirez family, Sean?"

Sean retorted with a scoff. "Who do you believe you are to challenge me? Remember how the Duncan family were disgracefully ousted from Invone? The past is a testament, and you'll see you can't just seize anything from the Ramirez family."

The Ramirez family members collectively stepped forward, demonstrating their fearless resolve.

Both Abbott and Demetrius wore expressions of concern. They sensed the Ramirez family's readiness to push their limits and contemplated the potential for middle ground.

A fatal clash wasn't their preference.

If such a conflict erupted, even with the Ramirez family's defeat, both their families would endure substantial damage. It wasn't the outcome they hoped for.

Rohan seemed unfazed by the situation, his aura dominant and commanding.

He stated, "If the Ramirez family won't yield, then ensure their entire home is reduced to ashes."

Upon his command, four individuals stepped forward from his team, each radiating a menacing energy.

These were the Duncan family's mightiest, second only to Rohan. The four people were called Four Great Steelmen.

For two decades, the Duncan family had invested heavily in these four, subjecting each to rigorous transformations, much like Cannon had experienced. Of the 100,000 experimental subjects over those years, only these four survived. Their transformations were so profound that they had lost much of their self-awareness, functioning primarily as deadly, human-like weapons.

With a subtle glance from Rohan, the four became mere silhouettes, swiftly positioning themselves amidst the Ramirez family.

Without hesitation, they unleashed a ferocious assault, striking with the force of a tempest.

Panic swept the Ramirez family. Armed, they fought the four intruders.

The air echoed with the rapid firing of bullets, shots so powerful they could penetrate armored vehicles.

Each member of Invone's four major families had trained to have the prowess of a special ops soldier. The seamless blend of firearms and melee weapons was masterful.

Yet, to confront the Four Great Steelmen, they needed more.

The four men fought in tandem, bullets seeming to simply bounce off them. When the Ramirez family got close enough to attack with their knives and bayonets, their weapons shattered upon impact.

"How is this possible..."

Before the front-liners of the Ramirez family could fully grasp their dread, they were swiftly decapitated by the four.

A chilling fear quickly coursed through the Ramirez family.

In desperation, they unleashed the power of heavy machine guns. It took hundreds to merely hold back two of Rohan's men.

As moments passed, the odds increasingly favored

Chapter 731 The Crisis Of The... hr.  +90 Points at most Rohan's side.

Exclusive Offer For You

Claim Now

 I want no ads >