After noting that everyone had gathered, the senator began without hesitation, "I don't want to leave you all guessing. I've brought everyone together today in the hope that the four great families can cease this ongoing strife. Your actions have severely disrupted both the public safety and the economic stability of Invone. Should our current structure be altered, numerous industries will undergo significant shifts. This isn't something the government wishes to witness."

Murmurs spread throughout the crowd upon these revelations.

Both the Sandoval and Padilla families faced the looming threat of Liam's retaliation. Consequently, they were inclined to accept the man's plea for harmony.

With a gracious smile, Abbott responded, "Indeed, the Sandoval family fully endorses the government's stance. We sincerely wish for this conflict to end so we can coexist peacefully henceforth."

In agreement, Carville added, "Given that it's the government's directive, the Padilla family stands firmly behind it."

But where there is agreement, dissent is bound to arise.

The heir of the Ramirez family, Javier, who had seen his family slain, wasn't about to forsake his vendetta so readily. With a piercing gaze fixed on Abbott and Carville, Javier slammed his hand on the table, rising in fury. "They took my father from me. And now you expect me to just forgive and forget? Impossible."

Liam scoffed, shaking his head. "When the Duncan, Sandoval, and Padilla families joined forces against us, where was the government? Now you speak up? I can't accept this."

The man in the main seat wore a solemn expression. He'd anticipated that things wouldn't be easy.

He recognized that his influence wasn't vast enough to mend this rift with mere words. Liam's opposition was expected.

He shifted his gaze to Liam. The Ramirez family was nearly decimated. The future, the possibility of peace, hinged on Liam's stance.

After pondering for a moment, he addressed Liam, "You have a point. The animosity between the Sandoval, Padilla, and Hoffman families won't just vanish. The government only asks that you don't annihilate them completely. How about this proposal? Name ten individuals, and you'll have the authority over their fate. Both clans will offer 200 million dollars in assets as collateral. Moving forward, you'll only pay the government five percent of your family's profits as taxes. The Padilla and Sandoval families will cover the remainder, and aid the Ramirez family's resurgence. What do you think?"

Liam remained silent. The man rose, approaching Liam and whispered, "Mr. Hoffman, the government's stance is more intricate than it seems. I'm bound by certain constraints. Assist me this once. Consider it a gesture of goodwill."

Liam's expression grew cold. His preference was clear. It was to eliminate the Sandoval and Padilla families. However, the man's offer was reasonable.

Facing off against the government wasn't in Liam's best interests. After a pause, he said, "200 million dollars from each is insufficient. Double it to 400 million. Furthermore, those responsible for the Hoffman family's deaths must face execution."

The man hesitated briefly, then nodded, casting a warning glance at Carville and Abbott.

The pair paled noticeably. The demanded compensation was staggering, but their current position allowed no room for dispute. They could only agree.

The man nodded contentedly, declaring the meeting adjourned.

For Liam, while it wasn't his ideal outcome, it was satisfactory.

Subsequently, the Sandoval and Padilla families were severely diminished. From that point on, in Invone, the dominant family was undeniably the Hoffman family.
