

Chapter 1678 Private Affairs Of The White...

Worried that Brandon might grow suspicious, Janet carefully avoided telling him the true reason behind her visit to the hospital with Johanna.

They lingered in the walk-in closet, with the hidden medicine in Janet's coat pocket posing a potential disaster if discovered by Brandon.

Urgently, Janet ushered Brandon out of the closet and into the bedroom, where they settled on the sofa. She began to recount her encounter with the two mysterious women, detailing every aspect of the experience.

Brandon listened intently, his interest piqued by the shifts in Janet's emotions, ranging from anger to a sense of helplessness. He found the entire story quite amusing.

Once Janet finished her tale, Brandon shared a revelation. "The women you saw at the hospital entrance today are actually your father's biological sisters."

This news left Janet in shock. The thought that those women could be related to her family had never crossed her mind.

"Your father had left his family years ago and lost touch with them. It's only after seeing his success that they've started to reach out," Brandon continued, delving deeper into the family history.

Janet listened, her interest deepening with every word. She gestured for Brandon to keep going.

"They believe that your father has no son and think that his assets rightfully belong to them. They even consider using his lack of a son as a reason to make him divorce your mother and drive her and Lila away."

"What? That's completely unacceptable!" Enraged by the revelation, Janet stood up abruptly. "If I ever meet them again, I will certainly teach them a lesson."

Amused by Janet's fiery reaction, Brandon chuckled in agreement. "Yes, we will teach them a lesson together."

They exchanged a knowing look and smiled, a silent pact forming between them. Janet sat back down, her gaze fixed on Brandon, signaling him to continue.

"Don't worry. Your mother is very astute and has never been at a disadvantage with them."

And your father, he's always firmly supported your mother. Whenever the Whites caused trouble, it was all for some gain. They'd leave as soon as they got what they wanted. But I never expected them to reappear."

Janet's eyes rolled in sheer disbelief. "Those women at the hospital ridiculed my mother, mocking her desire to have a son at her age. They think only a son can inherit everything."

As she spoke, a surge of anger welled up inside her. "Do they dismiss me just because I'm a girl?" she asked, her voice tinged with a cold edge.

Brandon responded with a gentle gesture, caressing Janet's head. "Don't let their words bother you. But tell me, did they do anything to hurt you?"

Janet shook her head in reassurance. "No, they didn't. Mom handled them swiftly, and we had Nightingale there. They couldn't have harmed me. You don't need to worry."

Remembering the advice Johanna had given her before leaving, Janet changed the subject. She tilted her head thoughtfully and said, "Mom advised us to stay out of this. Dad should deal with these family issues. For now, let's act as if we're unaware of all this."

"Okay," Brandon agreed, nodding. He had no intention of meddling in his father-in-law's
