

Chapter 1002 Mysterious Green Light

As the green light zapped into him, Liam winced in agony.

His muscles bulged out fast, like they were dancing with the wild energy inside.

But unlike Julie, Liam didn't puff up right away.

He sensed it and realized he could soak up this power.

But time was tight, and there was no room for distractions.

When the green light ditched Julie, the poison hit Julie fast, making her age instantly.

Liam fought the urge to soak up the light, focused hard, and channeled more energy from the primogem rock into Julie.

Julie's condition improved with the primogem rock's power.

But this didn't last long. In a blink, the primogem rock's energy ran dry.

Liam frowned. He hadn't expected that one primogem rock's power couldn't fully save Julie.

It only pumped the brakes on her aging.

Just as Liam pondered, his expression turned grave.

The green light rampaged inside him, wild and untamed.

No matter what Liam tried, he couldn't control it.

Gritting his teeth, Liam wrestled with his body, grabbed a needle, and stitched up Julie's chest.

After he finished stitching up, Liam reached his limit and passed out on the floor.

Outside the surgery room, Shayla was on edge.

An hour dragged by, and there was still no sign of Liam coming out of the surgery room.

Knowing Liam had excellent skills, Shayla's gut told her something had gone sideways.

Without second thoughts, Shayla pushed the surgery room door open and stepped in.

She quickly noticed Liam was out cold on the floor.

Julie seemed stable now, but she was still aging slower.

Seeing this, Shayla wrinkled her brow. She helped Liam up, ready to leave with him and Julie.

But then, out of the blue, the director of Rosefinch Hospital, who had lent the surgery room to Liam, barged in and halted Shayla's exit plan.

The director had his eye on Julie ever since he noticed the life energy in her. And the surgery room was full of cameras, which was why he had let Liam use it.

Through the surveillance feed, the hospital director had caught Liam cutting into Julie.

Liam's slick surgery skills were just what he craved.

It turned out the Rosefinch Hospital had been funneling bodies and organs to the Duncan family's lab.

Liam's dissecting technique had piqued the director's interest.

Glancing at the sudden appearance of the director, Shayla's face twisted into a frown as she uttered sharply, "We're out of here. Thanks for the surgery room."

Flashing a smile, the director replied, "No sweat. But hang on, the operation just wrapped up, and the patient isn't fit to leave yet. You'd better let her stay here for a while. Plus, we've got top-notch gear here, perfect for her treatment. If you delay, there's a real risk she won't make it. It isn't worth the gamble!"

That last bit laid bare the director's true colors.

Shayla wasn't naive to buy into the director's apparent kindness. She understood the threat in his words loud and clear!
