Liam exerted control over his tumultuous emotions and directed his attention to Laura. "What's the current situation within the Salvation Society? Are others aware of the War God House's master betraying the leader?"

Laura's expression darkened, her sorrow evident as she shook her head. "I'm the only one who knows. And even if I were to speak out, no one would believe me. The War God House's master has effectively usurped control of the Salvation Society. I've been branded a traitor now."

Liam's brow furrowed in concern, surprised by Laura's dire circumstances. Then, he nodded earnestly, offering his unwavering support. "I trust you," he said.

Laura's eyes welled up with tears, touched by his faith in her. Regaining her composure, she said, "Liam, the position of the Salvation Society's leader will be up for re-election in a year's time. I believe that you are the only one capable of challenging the War God House's master for that role. But you must stay safe. The fate of the entire Salvation Society rests on your shoulders now!"

Liam's lips curled in a bitter smile as he spoke with a hint of self-deprecation. "Me? What chance do I stand?"

Adamson has depleted much of my strength, and I'm currently nothing more than a tier-six zero-star Primogem Warrior. My position within the Salvation Society is unofficial, and I struggle to handle my existing enemies. Without your intervention, I'd likely have fallen to Adamson by now. Relying solely on me might not be our best course of action. We should explore other options rather than doing nothing."

Despite Liam's skepticism, Laura's faith in him remained resolute.

She met his gaze with unwavering trust. "Liam, no matter the odds, I believe in you. Your potential displayed on Genesis Island was remarkable. I have faith that you can overcome these challenges and seize leadership from the War God House's master. If necessary, we can find a safe haven to regroup and strengthen ourselves over the next year. Just one year, and we can return to Genesis Island to reclaim the Salvation Society. You can do it!"

Laura's response left Liam feeling resigned, recognizing her desperate attempt to make a bold gamble. Yet, there was a kernel of logic about laying low for a while.

Inspired, Liam proposed, "What if we consider joining the Saint Society?"

Laura, whose life had been confined to Genesis Island, interpreted Liam's suggestion differently, sparking immediate fury.

Before Liam could clarify, her anger boiled over, her cheeks flushing crimson with indignation.

She pointed at Liam and said, "Liam, I never imagined you would utter such words! While our leader is missing, instead of searching for him, you suggest betraying the Salvation Society to join the Saint Society? I misjudged you! You coward! Perhaps I should have let Adamson finish you off! You're utterly ungrateful! Have you forgotten all the leader has done for you? It's one thing to disregard the Salvation Society, but you don't even consider avenging our leader!"
