

Chapter 1802 Disappeared For Ten Years

The Barton family wanted to keep Wren close and under their control, so they decided to deal with Vinson, who was unaware of their schemes.

The Barton family contacted Jeremy and gave him the medication that played a part in Wren's mental troubles, using it on Vinson. Even though the medication didn't cause mental illness, it created symptoms that mimicked the condition. With their medical contacts, the Barton family got Vinson placed in a mental health facility. His reputation was damaged so fast that returning to his career became impossible.

Meanwhile, Wren found herself slipping back into a rough patch. Each day seemed like a blur, spent either medicating or dozing off. Completely unaware of the world outside, she was lost in her own haze.

It felt as if she had been asleep forever. When she finally woke up to reality, more than a year had slipped by.

The Barton family had kept her out of the loop on purpose, so she had no clue about Vinson's situation. She didn't even know that Jeremy was now her student. After a year working towards his Ph.D., Jeremy thought about his thesis and reached out to the Barton family to run experiments on Wren. That was when she knew he was her student now.

Wren had to depend on Jeremy to stay updated. But when she asked him about Vinson, Jeremy always hesitated, claiming he barely had any contact with Vinson and was unaware of his current situation.

Yet, Jeremy was one of Vinson's students. Was it possible they weren't in touch?

Jeremy explained that his and Vinson's research interests didn't align. He was interested in studying highly toxic drugs, a topic Vinson disagreed with. So, during his Ph.D., Jeremy switched advisors, choosing Wren for her expertise in toxic drug research.

Wren was aware of Vinson's disapproval of her interest in strong drugs; he had voiced his concerns multiple times.

Hearing this, Wren comforted Jeremy, explaining that although the drugs they were studying were really strong, they were meant to save lives. She believed that more potent drugs could yield better treatment results and as long as they were careful, their conscience would be clear.

Following that event, Wren conducted experiments with Jeremy. Still, she kept trying to reach out to Vinson. Yet, the Barton family kept a close eye on her, and it took quite a while before she could finally send out messages to Vinson. Sadly, there was no response.

Over the year, Wren cleverly resisted the Barton family's control. But when she finally managed to reach out to Vinson, he didn't return her calls or messages. It was as if he had vanished.

Jeremy only revealed to Wren that she should stop trying to reach Vinson when he came to pack up his things after graduating. "He's no longer at the research institute where he used to work, and he's married!"

Jeremy's revelations shocked Wren. She froze, barely able to breathe.

When she regained her composure, a single thought dominated her mind.

That couldn't be true.

Vinson wouldn't just abandon their love like that.

Yet, over the following two years, despite her relentless efforts, Wren couldn't get in touch with Vinson. Still, she held a strong belief that their relationship was unbreakable.

Five years on, the head of the Barton family fell seriously ill. The Barton family got caught up in their own problems and couldn't keep an eye on her. During their internal conflicts, Wren broke free and started her own studio.

Perhaps because it had been so long, she slowly lost faith in Vinson. She came to terms with his disappearance and wasn't as determined to find him anymore.

However, she never expected that when she completely gave up, the man who had disappeared for ten years would suddenly show up before her, looking so messy.

Vinson felt lost under Wren's prolonged stare. He swallowed nervously and took a step back without realizing it.

Was it already too late for him to leave now? Vinson thought.

But then, Wren, who had been sitting, suddenly stood and ran towards him.
