

Chapter 1923 Clyde Came To Take Photos

Janet beamed with delight. "These dresses are stunning. I'm sure our clients will adore them," she remarked cheerfully.

Despite Janet's enthusiasm, Tasha remained nervous until the clients arrived to collect the clothes. Their satisfaction finally put her at ease.

The mother who ordered the dresses asked, "May we try them on and take some photos in the studio? I'm concerned they might get soiled if my daughter wears it to the banquet."

Janet observed the child eyeing the pink dress with fascination and nodded in agreement. "Of course. What kind of backdrop would you prefer, and do you have any specific photographer requirements?"

The woman smiled graciously. "Just the use of your studio space will suffice. I've arranged for a professional photography team, and they're waiting at the nearby coffee shop."

Janet agreed readily, and soon, several staff members arrived with bags of equipment.

However, Janet was taken aback when she spotted the photographer trailing behind them.

It was Clyde.

Clyde approached Janet eagerly, greeting her with a warm smile. "The woman who ordered the dresses is my cousin. I happened to be free today, so she asked for my assistance."

Janet, though taken aback by the coincidence, maintained her composure. "What a small world. That's fine. Please proceed with the photo-shoot."

As they began capturing images, Janet observed Clyde's interactions with the mother and daughter, noting their genuine connection. This eased her initial discomfort.

Once the shoot concluded and the clients left, Clyde took a moment to rest and hydrate.

Holding a glass of water, he approached Janet once more. "Would you like to select some of the photos I took for your studio's publicity?"

Janet accepted his camera and motioned for Tasha to join her in reviewing the images.

It was clear that Clyde was indeed a skilled photographer. Impressed by his work, Tasha's confidence in her designs soared.

Janet smiled warmly. "That sounds great. We'd be happy to compensate you for your efforts. Your work is exceptional, and we're thrilled with the results."

"Absolutely!" Clyde's enthusiasm was palpable.

Janet and Tasha selected a handful of photos, instructing Lexi to update the designer information on the official website and feature the chosen images in Tasha's promotional section.

Clyde couldn't resist teasing Janet, remarking, "You haven't changed a bit, always finding ways to save on publicity expenses."

Janet chuckled, recalling how Clyde had played a pivotal role in her earlier success in the design world. "I consider myself fortunate to have such a talented designer as a friend."

As they conversed, Janet couldn't help but peruse the photos on Clyde's camera. After scanning through over a hundred images, including some striking models and scenery shots, she couldn't shake the nagging thought. Could Clyde not be involved in the secret filming of her?

Pushing aside her suspicions, Janet returned the camera to Clyde and inquired, "A camera that produces such excellent photos must come with a hefty price tag. I'm considering purchasing one for studio advertisements, but our budget is limited. Any recommendations?"

Clyde's smile widened as he explained, "This camera is actually a basic model, perfect for beginners."

He then retrieved his phone and quickly recommended a camera shop to Janet. "I suggest you check out this place. They offer good-quality cameras at reasonable prices. You can mention my name, and they'll give you a discount."
